and with their noses made fast to a rail in close proximity to the gutter which carries off the drainage from the stalls. This is, of course, a defect that could be remedied by the erection of more cattle sheds on the company's property. This firm's stock consists chiefly of Australian cows, all in apparently good health, and which will be added to when the Calithus arrives from Port Darwin a few days hence, fifteen milch cows having been shipped by her on account of the East Point Company by their Port Darwin buyer. This Co.'s cattle get a certain amount of exercise daily in a yard adjacent to their stalls.

Of the three foreign dairies named only one of them has suffered by reason of the outbreak of cattle disease, namely, the Hongkong Dairy Farm Co. at Poko-lam, which lost 9 head of cattle through pleuropneumonia. The establishment is now free of the disease and carrying on business in the usual way—supplying more milk to customers than their cows produce. But more of this soon—in our next issue where we shall expose the condition of Chinese dairies and give particulars of the sources from which many important local institutions draw their supplies of milk, as well as interesting facts relating to the way in which some dairymen contrive to "palm off" others' milk as the "genuine article" obtained from their very own imported milk-cows. And a word in season on the adulteration of milk and the use of the lactometer will bring to a close a report which it is hoped will let light on a subject which has hitherto been enshrouded in darkness, as to facts, which the important issues involved would seem to render almost incomprehensible under the circumstances.

It may, however, be added here that no less than seven Europeans are laid up with typhoid fever in Fenchow, the cause of which is attributed by their respective physicians to the use of milk procured from a native dairy, although by paying a few extra more per pint they could have procured their milk from a well-known European dairy in the settlement.

SHOOTING.
